Building and Sustaining a Public Humanities Program: a Case Study from the United States. (In English)

Professor Ricardo L. Ortiz, Director, MA Program in Engaged and Public Humanities, Georgetown University.

While using the MA Program in Engaged and Public Humanities at Georgetown University as a touchstone, this session will also explore possible alternative approaches to building public humanities "infrastructures" in institutions of higher education using recent published work on the topic. We will focus on program building, curricular design, faculty recruitment and development, and student training, as well as on alternative models of public outreach, and alternative approaches to serving the public good.

Chair: Professor Liat Kozma, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem

Visioning and Unlearning (In English)
